Ms. Hayes,

Thanks for contacting me.

I've seen the ICEE reference on my SourceWatch page and always wondered where that came from.

To the best of my knowledge, I never had any associations with them. I think most of the time ICEE was active I was still pretty early on in grad school. I think that perhaps Pat Michaels had some early involvement with ICEE but quickly stopped work with them after he was unhappy about the way they were presenting his views. Again, this is very sketchy in my mind as it took place (I think) in the mid-late 1980s and don't think I had any involvement.

The Exxonsecrets page you linked to seems very much like a description of the staff of our publication World Climate Report (which was not associated with ICEE), that we have been producing since the mid-1990s. The staff, and the publication itself has varied through time, but here is a link to our "Editors & Contributors" page circa the year 2000:

<http://www.worldclimatereport.com/archive/editors/editors.htm>

You can see that there appears to be large overlap in the descriptions and personnel (although Fred Seitz was never part of our WCR effort), so maybe the Exxonsecrets page is slightly confusing some things.

I hope this helps a bit.

I'll gladly try to answer any further questions that you may have.

-Chip

PS. I've taken the liberty to attach my resume so that you can better fill in the list of my scientific publications which is severely lacking in the current Sourcewatch page (http://www.sourcewatch.org/index.php?title=Chip_Knappenberger).
